A cloud can never die: Ice, water, mist

Phoebe McDonald (QLD)

@SAWTOOTH POP-UP #EXHIBITION 1 – 23 November 2013

A cloud can never die: Ice, water, mist (1) (2012) photograph, 57x58cm.

Phoebe McDonald's work is centred on concepts of interconnectedness and impermanence, and she has an ongoing interest in the nature of light, time, space and perception. She is also interested in the subtle changes and cyclic events that occur in the natural environment over time.

Reflected colour and shadows are important compositional elements in Phoebe's work. Her recent photographs are concerned with the way that changes in light transform the appearance of landscapes - and the appearance of her sculptures is transformed by changes in light. Shadows in the work evolve throughout the day depending on the angle and intensity of available sunlight.

The series of photographs 'A cloud can never die: Ice, water, mist' was taken during the arctic summer in Greenland - when the sun doesn't set and dusk and dawn merge into an extended twilight. It continues Phoebe's investigation into light and landscape.
